Getting the Most From Your Environmental Management System

Organizations that proactively implement an environmental management system (EMS) save money and increase profits. The ISO 14001 standard is the key to successfully developing an EMS. Environmental impacts are no longer a cost of doing business over which there is little control. Every organization, regardless of its location or the product it manufactures, has environmental impacts on its neighbors. ISO 14001 registration offers an organized approach to manage these environmental impacts. Using this approach, an organization can cut environmentally-related costs such as those relating to energy, disposal, and waste treatment, thereby increasing profits.
